

FRONT

Mountain bluebird

*Sialia
currucoides*

Mountain
bluebird

*Sialia
currucoides*

Mountain
bluebird

*Sialia
currucoides*

Mountain
bluebird

*Sialia
currucoides*

Mountain
bluebird

*Sialia
currucoides*

BACK

The Mountain bluebird is the most brilliant of the state symbols, with bright blue coloring over almost its entire body. It is the male that exhibits this coloring, while the female is brown and blue. It is a member of the thrush family and has a clear warbling song. The mountain bluebird lives at high elevations, feeding mostly on insects. Sometimes this bird is called the “bluebird of happiness,” after a children’s story written in the early 1900’s.

The Mountain bluebird is the most brilliant of the state symbols, with bright blue coloring over almost its entire body. It is the male that exhibits this coloring, while the female is brown and blue. It is a member of the thrush family and has a clear warbling song. The mountain bluebird lives at high elevations, feeding mostly on insects. Sometimes this bird is called the “bluebird of happiness,” after a children’s story written in the early 1900’s.

The Mountain bluebird is the most brilliant of the state symbols, with bright blue coloring over almost its entire body. It is the male that exhibits this coloring, while the female is brown and blue. It is a member of the thrush family and has a clear warbling song. The mountain bluebird lives at high elevations, feeding mostly on insects. Sometimes this bird is called the “bluebird of happiness,” after a children’s story written in the early 1900’s.

The Mountain bluebird is the most brilliant of the state symbols, with bright blue coloring over almost its entire body. It is the male that exhibits this coloring, while the female is brown and blue. It is a member of the thrush family and has a clear warbling song. The mountain bluebird lives at high elevations, feeding mostly on insects. Sometimes this bird is called the “bluebird of happiness,” after a children’s story written in the early 1900’s.

The Mountain bluebird is the most brilliant of the state symbols, with bright blue coloring over almost its entire body. It is the male that exhibits this coloring, while the female is brown and blue. It is a member of the thrush family and has a clear warbling song. The mountain bluebird lives at high elevations, feeding mostly on insects. Sometimes this bird is called the “bluebird of happiness,” after a children’s story written in the early 1900’s.

